CANDY

A Case of TRICKERY

MRS. O'CONNOR was bustling about the house and Candy was helping to get everything in order when Ted barged in. "What's buzzin', cousin?" he asked. "What brought on the big cleaning spree?"

"Company," grimaced Candy, taking Ted aside so that her mother wouldn't hear what she said. "Some horrible woman that mom knew years ago is coming by with her sonny boy. I think it's going to be gruesome."

"Will it interfere with our date for the dance tonight?" asked Ted.

"Not if I can help it," replied Candy. Then gesturing for Ted to be on his way, she added, "I have to help mom now but drop by about two this afternoon and give me an excuse to break away, huh?"

"Sure," grinned Ted. "I'll be here."

The house was in apple pie order and Candy and her mother were neat and ready when Mrs. Morgan and her son Todd arrived at noon. Candy stared from the winow at the long, shining convertible and the fellow who was driving it. Could this be the boy her mother had told her about? She had expected to see a brat of about ten, not a tall handsome young man of twenty. She rushed to the mirror to put an extra pat to her hair. She hadn't expected to see anyone so exciting.

The four had lunch at the O'Connors. Todd turned his entire attention to Candy. He talked while she listened. He told of his great achievements in high school and of his stupendous popularity in college. He bragged about his special talents in sports. He discussed his tailor made clothes. He made slight mention of how girls annoyed him, trying to get dates. Candy was impressed. She actually forgot about Ted in her enthusiasm for Todd Morgan. And she was about to have a ride in the sleek convertible when Ted walked up the street.

"Hi, Candy," he beamed. "I came by to keep our date for this afternoon and—"

"I'm sorry," replied Candy snobbishly, "but can't you see that I'm busy? I told you we were having guests."

She introduced the two fellows and then excused herself to rush into the house for a wrap. But as she looked back and saw them talking together, she thought, "There's absolutely no comparison. Ted's never grown up. Todd is quite a man."

Trish came along about that time. Ted made the introduction. And the three stood beside the convertible—Trish and Ted and Todd. But Todd did all the talking. He boasted about his car. He made a big point of the fact that he dated debs in the city. He referred to the fact that most of them were rich.

When Candy came to join them, she smiled at Ted and said, "I'm sorry but I won't see you tonight. I'm taking Todd to the dance."

As the big car sped away, Trish and Ted looked at each other with upturned noses. "Whew," remarked Ted. "What a conceited character."

"A goon man, if you ask me," remarked Trish. "If Candy wants him, she can have him."

"Hey, not so fast," protested Ted. "Do you think I want that dope cutting in on my territory? I've already lost my date for the dance tonight."

Trish had promised to go with Dean. "But Cornelia's free," she said to Ted. "I heard her say that she wasn't going to the dance and it's probably because no one has asked her. So that's your chance!"

"Me take Cornelia Clyde?" objected Ted. "You know I can't stand that snooty babe!"

"Neither can I," smiled Trish. "But ask her anyway. Remember that birds of a feather flock together. And leave everything to me. We'll try a little trickery."

Ted saw the twinkle in Trish's eye and knew that she was to be trusted. So he invited Cornelia to the dance and was accepted. And that night, he had to admit to himself that Cornelia looked beautiful even if she was big-headed and a bore. Candy was dancing with Todd organ and seemed to be completely absorbed in his charming ways. But when Trish sidled up to talk to Cornelia, Ted saw that she was working out a plan and excused himself for the moment.

"This friend of Candy's," Trish explained, "is very wealthy and has a big car and—" She rambled on and on and could see that Cornelia was impressed and was ready to stop at nothing to get him away from Candy. Then, when she saw Candy go to the powder room, Trish talked to Todd. "That's Cornelia Clyde over there," she said, nodding to the girl who was watching out of the corner of her eye. "She comes from the finest family in town. They're rolling in money. And she would like to meet you."

Todd asked to be introduced and Trish did the honors. When Candy returned, Todd and Cornelia were dancing together and seemed smitten with each other.

"Well, I like that," scoffed Candy. "If he hasn't any better sense than to go for her—"

"I didn't want to bring her, Candy," explained Ted, "but you let me down and she was all that was left."

"We'll leave them both," declared Candy with her nose tilted in the air. "I don't care for either of them."

So Candy and Ted spent the rest of the evening at the dance together and Trish watched and enjoyed the results of her case of trickery.
